ROYAL COMMISSION ON ENVIRONMENTAL POLLUTION*Invitation to submit evidence on Energy and the Environment*

The Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution is to review energy prospects for the 21st century and their environmental implications. The aim is to identify the actions required in the years immediately ahead to develop a sustainable strategy for energy provision and use. This study by the Royal Commission will compare the environmental consequences of different methods of providing energy. It will examine the scope for radical reductions in energy requirements. The principal focus will be the UK and Europe. The global context will be considered in order to identify the constraints and opportunities likely to arise. The study will draw on analyses of particular aspects already carried out by other bodies, together with the Royal Commission's own work on energy use in transport. Some studies by consultants will also be commissioned.

For the first stage of the study the Commission will assemble and collate existing material on some key topics. The topics identified for this initial stage are: overall scenarios for future energy demand and supply in the UK, in Europe and globally; the environmental implications of such scenarios, especially in terms of pollution produced by the energy sector; technological, economic and social assessment of the scope for reducing demand for energy, including the possibility of radical changes in technology or in design practices under approaches such as Factor Four and Factor Ten; the potential contributions to energy supplies from various sources and the constraints on their development; environmental, economic and social assessment, on a life-cycle basis, of alternative technologies for energy supply; how governments can best interact with energy markets to ensure the development of those markets reflects environmental costs and risks; and the effectiveness of present institutions in framing and delivering energy policies that are environmentally sustainable.

The Royal Commission invites organisations and individuals to draw relevant work to its attention.

Early next year the Royal Commission will define specific issues for investigation, and will invite written and oral evidence on these. It intends to publish its report in the first half of 1999.

Copies of, or references to, material relevant to the study should be sent to Rosemary Ferguson, Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution, Church House, Great Smith Street, London SW1P 3BZ. Telephone enquiries should be made to Cathy Garretty on 0171-276 2123, Enid Barron on 0171-276 2036, or the Secretariat on 0171-276 2080.

Unless indicated otherwise, when information is submitted it will be assumed that the organisation or individual submitting it does not have any objection to its disclosure, on request, to the public under the provisions of the Environmental Information Regulations 1992 (SI 1992/3240). (S SI)
