Prevention of postmenopausal osteoporosis in women considered at risk of developing fractures. Where several risk factors are present hormone replacement therapy should be considered. Epidemiological studies have suggested that a number of risk factors may contribute to postmenopausal osteoporosis, and these include early menopause (either natural or surgically induced), family history of osteoporosis, recent prolonged corticosteroid therapy, a small thin frame, excessive cigarette consumption. Bone mineral density measurements may help to confirm the presence of low bone mass. For maximum prophylactic benefit, treatment should commence as soon as possible after the menopause.
