Environmental Protection

Department for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs

The Government wishes to announce proposed changes to The Environmental Protection (Restriction on the Use of Lead Shot) (England) Regulations 1999. In November 1999, following the introduction of the Regulations, the Government announced that a review Group would be set up particularly to review the list of wetland sites covered by the Regulations in light of the first year's experience. The Group concluded that some changes were required to ensure that the Regulations operated appropriately and effectively so as to achieve their objective whilst minimising unnecessary restrictions on shooting and land management. During 2001 a public consultation exercise was undertaken in order to formally consult involved parties on the recommendations put forward by the Lead Shot Legislation (England) Review Group. The Minister for the Environment, Michael Meacher, has agreed the recommendations put forward and it is proposed that the amendments be implemented before the start of the shooting season.

The proposed amendments to the Schedules for the Regulations shall be as follows:

Common Name	Scientific Name

NOTE TO EDITORS

During the late 1990's the United Kingdom Government worked together with shooting, farming and conservation organisations, along with the gun and ammunition industry, to phase out the use of lead shot over wetlands in the United Kingdom.

Since 1991, the UK Lead Poisoning in Waterfowl Working Group has encouraged the development of alternatives to lead shot and encouraged people who shoot in or near wetlands, where it would pose a threat of poisoning to waterfowl, to switch to non-toxic alternatives.

Following a 4-year voluntary phase-out of lead shot, on 1 September 1999 the Government introduced new regulations, the Environmental Protection (Restriction on Use of Lead Shot) (England) Regulations 1999 SI No 2170, to prohibit the use of lead shot over certain wetlands and for waterfowl shooting in England. The objective of these Regulations was to protect waterfowl against poisoning from lead shot and to help the United Kingdom meet its commitment under the African-Eurasian Waterbird Agreement (AEWA) to endeavour to phase out the use of lead shot over wetlands by the year 2000. The Regulations were not intended to unnecessarily restrict shooting but to alter shooting practices, and to ensure that spent lead shot does not cause unnecessary deaths. In Northern Ireland, Wales and Scotland this is a matter for the devolved administrations.

Following introduction of the Regulations, the Government announced on 9 November 1999 that a Review Group would be set up particularly to review the list of wetland sites covered by the Regulations as well as the effectiveness of the Regulations in the light of the first year's experience. The Government therefore convened the Lead Shot Legislation (England) Review Group. The Group comprised of representatives from conservation, land-owning, farming, shooting and ammunition industry organisations.

The Group considered issues relating to the list of sites in Schedule 1 and to the effectiveness of the Regulations. The Group concluded that some changes were required to ensure that the Regulations operated appropriately and effectively so as to achieve their objective while also minimising unnecessary restrictions on shooting and land management. The Group's recommendations were set out in a formal Report.

During 2001 a public consultation exercise was undertaken in order to formally consult involved parties on the recommendations put forward by the Lead Shot Legislation (England) Review Group.

Michael Meacher recently announced the proposed changes to the Environmental Protection (Restriction on the Use of Lead Shot) (England) Regulations 1999, for the list of sites on Schedule 1 and the species on Schedule 2. Government Officials have drawn up the changes to the Regulations and these will be laid before Parliament before 9 August 2002. It is anticipated that the changes will be introduced before the start of the next shooting season. (803)
