

turned from Chapel went to Bed. In the Evening he had a Shivering followed by a Fever, and having felt since a Pain in his Head and Throat, the Physicians agreed to bleed him, which was done accordingly Yesterday in the Evening, after which his Majesty found himself relieved. The Physicians are of Opinion, this Indisposition will be of no ill Consequence. The Duke d'Aumont is out of Danger, for which his Relations caused some Days ago Te Deum to be sung in the Church of St. Gervais. On the 30th past, the Duke of Bourbon entertained the Turkish Ambassadors at Chantilly, from whence the latter returned the next Day, and came in the Evening to take Leave of Sir Robert Sutton, His Britannick Majesty's Ambassador here. He sets out this Morning for Fontainebleau, where he will stay two Days. The Count de Thoulouse is gone thither to receive him, and to give him the Diversion of Stag-Hunting. After which he will proceed on his Journey to Sette, where he is to embark; taking his Way through Lyons, the Vivarez, and Montpellier. P.S. The King rested very well last Night, and finds himself much better this Morning.
