Arms, to be preſerved amongſt the Archives of the Order.

The Muſick then played for ſome Time, during which his Highneſs repoſed himſelf in his Stall, and the Plenipotentiaries ſat down in their Chairs.

After which the King of Arms roſe up, and making an Obedience to the Sovereign's Stall and to the Duke, took from the Table, whereon the Enſigns of the Order were laid, the Mantle, and giving it to the Envoy, they jointly inveſted his Highneſs therewith, the King of Arms reading the Admonition in Latin.

In the ſame Manner the Hood was delivered and fixed upon the right Shoulder of his Highneſs.

The Collar was put on in like Manner, the King of Arms reading the Admonition.

Then the Envoy delivered to his Highneſs the Book of Statutes.

o Laſtly the Commiſſioners placed the Cap and Feathers, which was richly adorned with Diamonds, on his Highneſs's Head, and then made a Reverence to the Stall of the Sovereign.

After a ſhort Repoſe the King of Arms ſtood up, and making his Obedience to the Stall of the Sovereign, and alſo to the Prince, proclaimed in Latin, the Styles of the Sovereign and of his moſt ſerene Highneſs.

The Proclamation of the Styles being made, the Trumpets ſounded and Kettle Drums beat, and Forty Cannon were fired round the Caſtle.

The Proceſſion returned in the like Manner, the two Gentlemen bearing the Train of the Duke's Mantle.

At Dinner the Plenipotentiaries were ſeated in the ſame Manner as they had been the Day before.

When the Deſert was put upon the Table, his Highneſs took off his Cap, and was pleaſed to drink Health firſt to the King of Great-Britain, Sovereign of the moſt noble Order of the Garter, and a Salvo of 12 Cannon was given, which was repeated, as every ſingle Perſon at Table drank the ſame; then to their Royal Highneſſes the Prince and Princeſs of Wales, and all the Royal Family, under a like Salvo of Six Cannon; and laſtly to the Knights Companions of the moſt noble Order of the Garter, with a Salvo of Four Cannon.

The whole Solemnity was performed with the utmoſt Splendor, Magnificence and Regularity.
