THE Town is laid out, and every Man, by drawing Lots, knows where to build his House. The Governor has made the best Disposition he can of the Troops, in order to guard against any Attempts of the Indians, should they begin to be troublesome. Thirteen Indians are arrived here, three Deputies from the Tribes at St. John's, the Chief of the Chinecto Indians, and nine of their Tribes; they came with Instructions from their Nations to renew their Submission, and Articles of Agreement, according to the last Treaty made in the year 1726: and this Afternoon they return by Sea to St. John's with Captain Howe, who carries Presents for the Chiefs and the whole Tribes, and is to bring back the Treaty ratified.
